Abstract: John Howard, the recently-appointed Commissioner of the New York State Public Service Commission, will bring his extensive knowledge of and inside look into the clean energy and climate initiatives in New York State.

Commissioner Howard has over 37 years of New York State service, serving in various roles in the Legislature and Executive branches, with vast experience in the energy sector. At the New York Power Authority, he was responsible for monitoring relevant activities at the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), Department of Environmental Conservation and the Commission. He served as Executive Deputy Director at the New York State Consumer Protection Board where he oversaw the Board's utility intervention filings to the Commission, FERC and the Federal Communications Commission. He was also responsible for the Board's consumer advocacy and public outreach programs.
